

Connected, Accessible, Smart Infrastructure to Reach Global Markets

Today's environment requires customized services and delivery options that are flexible and faster than ever before. No matter what you make or where it needs to go, you can exceed consumer expectations with Ohio's distribution and fulfillment solutions.

With a diverse and extensive infrastructure, a central location close to customers, a qualified industry workforce and a thriving tech culture, Ohio is the best place for logistics and distribution companies to excel in a highly digital age.

UPS, DHL, FedEx, and the U.S. Postal Service have six distribution and processing hubs in Ohio – more than any other Midwest state.

Ohio has a strong transportation infrastructure with the nation's fourth largest interstate system, 10 major rail yards, 13 intermodal terminals, four dedicated air cargo terminals, seven commercial airports and three inland water ports.

Ohio has nine foreign trade zones and is the only state in the Midwest with direct shipping routes to Europe for both container and heavy goods.

Ohio is fast becoming a global hub for the research, testing and deployment of smart transportation technologies, with designated smart corridor routes for driverless and connected vehicles.

Companies have access to a large pool of reliable and skilled workers, and more than 25 institutions of higher education in Ohio offer nationally ranked programs in supply chain management and logistics.

Low taxes keep costs down. Ohio has no commercial activity tax on products sold outside the state, no state tax on corporate profits and no state tax on personal property.

Proximity to Customers and Markets

Ohio's multimode transportation capabilities provide seamless national and global access.

Ohio is an E-Commerce Hub

Ohio is becoming an e-commerce hub for retail companies moving closer to dense population centers of customers ordering online. In addition to its physical infrastructure, Ohio offers a collaborative network of retail, fintech, and logistics and distribution companies working together to create, deliver and enhance value for both companies and customers.
